Allen Dulles, former chief of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency and lately a member of the Warren Commission investigating the assassination of President Kennedy, will deliver a public address Thursday, at 8 p.m., in the Sacramento State College Men's Gymnasium.

The talk, sponsored by the California State College State-wide Lecture Series, is open to the public without charge. The title of Dulles' talk is "The Role of Intelligence in our National Security."

PRINCETON

A native of Watertown, N.Y., Dulles received his bachelor's and master's degrees from Princeton University prior to accepting a teaching job in India in 1915. He entered the U.S. diplomatic service in 1916, one year before the U.S. entered World War I and was assigned variously at Vienna, Bern, and Paris where he served with the American Commission to Negotiate Peace in 1918.

Later he served in Berlin, Constantinople, Geneva, and in Washington, D.C.

Dulles, who is a brother of the late Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, obtained his LL.B. degree from George Washington University in 1926.

NAVAL CONFERENCE

A year later he was named legal adviser to the American delegation to the Three-Power Naval Conference held in Geneva in 1927. He again served as legal adviser to the Americans attending the General Disarmament Conference held there in 1932-33. During World War

II Dulles was attached to the OSS. He became director of the CIA in 1953, a post he held until 1962.

Dulles recently published a book, "The Craft of Intelligence."

Dulles' appearance at SSC is part of a four-part series of addresses which have been scheduled for San Diego State, Fresno State, California State at Los Angeles, and at Sacramento.

Dulles will be introduced by Glenn S. Dumke, chancellor of the California State Colleges.
